

JAMMED IN THE FOYER of Sidney Smith Hall the day after the Arts and Science Council meeting, students (half of whom can be seen here) voted down an immediate strike. After a second rally, they voted to hold a referendum.

Constitutional changes made at special ATS general meeting

At a special general meeting held on Jan. 19, the membership of the Association of the Teaching Staff approved constitutional changes to take effect July 1. The changes include the following:

- (1) Change in name to University of Toronto Faculty Association;
- (2) Change in name of chief executive officer from chairman to president, and president to be elected by the membership from among candidates nominated by members of Council from the membership; the first such president will be elected in March of this year, and will take office July 1;
- (3) Change in year of operation to coincide with the academic year, July 1 to June 30;
- (4) Reduction in number of standing committees to three: Salary and Benefits; University Government, and Grievances; the chairmen of these committees are officers and members of the executive committee;

- (5) Creation of a new constituency or unit to have a representative on Council: New College;
- (6) Increase in the quorum for a meeting from 50 to 100;
- (7) Change in date of Annual General Meeting from November to March of each year and elimination of a second required General Meeting each year; special general meetings may be called, among other ways, by request of 50 members;

In addition to the president, other new officers will be elected in the spring to take office July 1, as well as new members of Council to replace those whose three-year term would normally end in November.

At a meeting held on Jan. 14 the ATS Council voted to contribute $500 to the Spadina Review Corporation.

Arts strike vote is close but majority are opposed

By a majority of 122 votes or 54 votes, depending upon which way the vote was counted, Arts and Science students voted on Monday and Tuesday against a strike in support of parity on the Faculty Council.

A blackboard in Sidney Smith Hall foyer on Wednesday listed the results by polling stations—Erindale College, Scarborough College, and 12 on the St. George Campus. These figures, when totalled, gave this result: against a strike—4,207; for a strike—4,085. But the ad hoc referendum committee showed the totals as: against, 4,114; for, 4,060. It was explained at a student rally that the latter figure was official because the detailed totals by polling stations had included a number of irregular ballots.

Erindale students voted 499 to 407 against striking. Scarborough students voted 538 to 366 for a strike. St. George Campus students voted against by a small margin.

A dozen students "sat in" at the entrance to the Faculty office and were there when Assistant Dean W. D. Foulds and his staff arrived for work in the morning. The students intimated that they would enter the office with the staff if the doors were opened. Rather than cause any unpleasantness, Mr. Foulds sent his staff to other rooms and the office remained closed.

At the rally called by the strike committee, about 300 students—less than half the number that attended two previous meetings in the foyer—heard calls for action. Several suggestions were advanced. One speaker asked students to turn classes into strike meetings, at which parity would be discussed. Another speaker urged picketing of corridors in Arts and Science buildings and colleges, where students attending classes would be urged to boycott the sessions. Speakers generally described the proposed actions as steps in a "voluntary non-violent educational boycott".

Aside from the sit-in outside the Faculty office and the continuing "parity festival" in the foyer, there was little abnormal activity in Sidney Smith Hall.

A report of the events preceding this week's student action appears on page 3.

Dr. Bissell asks Hon. W. G. Davis for meetings on tenant problems

The following statement by President Claude Bissell was read by William Kent, chairman of the Presidential Advisory Committee on Student Housing, to a delegation of tenants from the Charles Street married students' residence. A total of 240 students — those from the residence and others who supported them — heard the statement in Convocation Hall.

Text of the statement follows:

In 1966 the President's Committee on Residences reported on priorities in student housing and recommended as one of its early priorities the provision of residence space for married graduate and undergraduate students.

At that time, under the regulations of the Department of University Affairs, no financial assistance was available to the University for a married student residence. Within the University itself there were no funds which could be used for these priorities and there was no land which could be made available for the purpose of constructing on it a married student residence. However, the need for married student accommodation was made known to the Ontario Government and consideration was subsequently given to a financing arrangement offered by the Ontario Housing Corporation under which all necessary capital funds would be arranged for by that corporation.

Representatives of the university met with the representatives of the Ontario Student Housing Corporation to describe the kinds of residence space desired, the preferred geographical locations and other relevant matters. After prolonged discussions and examination the OSHC officials recommended for acceptance a proposal by the Rubin Corporation for 713 units for two buildings at 30-35 Charles Street West. The proposal produced the best dollar value for the facilities provided, in the judgment of OSHC appraisers. They were located within easy walking distance from the campus, thus offering savings to the students on transportation costs and the opportunity to return to the campus for evening work at laboratories or the library without serious loss of time — a feature considered important especially by and for married graduate students. In addition, it would make it possible for married students with children to be accommodated in a location near the university campus. Commercial apartments in this area usually do not permit tenants with children.

On Feb. 26, 1968, an agreement with OSHC was executed, providing for construction by the OSHC of the Rubin buildings on Charles Street West at an estimated cost of approximately $11,792,000 for rent to "bona fide students attending universities, colleges or institutions" . . . "on a full recovery basis guaranteed by the University." Capital for the project was to be 90% for a mortgage loan from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for 50 years at the rate of 5% per annum and 10 per cent by a similar mortgage loan from the Province of Ontario at an interest rate of 6%. Although some tenants were accommodated as early as December, 1968, full use of the building was not effective until mid-1970.

I want to emphasize that it would not have been possible to provide accommodation for married students at the University of Toronto without an arrangement whereby outside authorities provided the land and capital to construct the two buildings now located at 30 and 35 Charles Street West.

The original rental rates were established on the basis of operating cost estimates prepared before the start of construction and they were effective until August 1970. In the spring of 1970, when operating arrangements for 1970-71 were being prepared, representatives of the tenants were included in the discussions. It was found possible to modify the budget first brought forward by the OSHC and to avoid any increase in rents for the year 1970-71. Therefore the rental rates now in effect are the rates originally established for the 1969-70 session.

I am aware of the fact that in the course of rental rate discussions early in 1970 the tenant representatives argued that if it had not been necessary to finance the purchase of land for the project and if the project had enjoyed exemption from municipal taxes, the rentals would have been lowered by $50 per suite per month. There have been subsequent discussions of this point between the tenants, the OHC and the University, but no way of changing the situation has been found. It must be clear from the foregoing that the University has no means at its disposal for modifying the present contractual arrangements nor does it have available the necessary funds to buy off the existing mortgages on the land.

In summary, the married student apartments at 30 and 35 Charles Street West are owned and operated by the OSHC. They were provided by the OSHC in response to a need for married student accommodation which the University of Toronto was unable to provide from its own capital resources. Though the tenants of these two buildings are University of Toronto students, the University's involvement in the operation of the buildings is limited to the certification of an applicant's student status and to a guarantee of any operating deficit which might occur.

I fully support the Provost's statement of July 29, 1970, "that the University is naturally concerned about the quality and cost of housing available to its students, but that the University does not support or condone the proposed rent strike." I am fully cognizant, however, that the lack of available University land at the time this project was developed on which to construct these married student residences has added to the capital and operating costs of the project and has thus placed the tenants of these buildings in a less favourable position than students in similar circumstances at a number of other provincially-assisted universities in Ontario. In August of last year the University brought this question to the attention of the Deputy Minister of University Affairs in a letter signed by the Vice-President (Administration). The letter set forth the complaint of the Charles Street tenants that the "method of financing of this project had placed them in a less favourable position than other students in the Province of Ontario living in OHC residences which have been constructed under different conditions". As a consequence of the University's initiative in this regard a meeting was held on Sept. 10, 1970, in the offices of the Ontario Housing Corporation to discuss this whole matter. The meeting was attended by officials of OHC and OSHC, Deputy Minister Stewart of the Department of University Affairs, representatives of the Tenants' Association, the presidents of the Students' Administrative Council and the Graduate Students' Union, and a number of University of Toronto officials. The request of the tenants for arrangements which could permit a substantial rent reduction was discussed at some length, but no means were found to alter the existing contractual arrangements.

As President of the University I have today (Jan. 20) written to the Hon. William G. Davis, Minister of Education and University Affairs, to request further meetings to discuss the questions that have been raised by the Charles Street Tenants' Association on behalf of the tenants. I hope that this renewed initiative by the University will have helpful results.

Through the chairman of the Presidential Advisory Committee on Student Housing, you have put a number of specific questions to the University to which you would like to have an answer. In response to these questions I would like to state the university's position:

1. What position does the University take vis-à-vis the definition of "full recovery of costs"?

Under the present agreement, "full cost recovery" includes both the cost of the land and building. The terms accepted were the most favourable which could be obtained at the time and in the circumstances then existing.

2. What is the University's position vis-à-vis the eviction process now embarked upon by the OSHC?

Each tenant has signed a lease agreeing to pay his rent, knowing precisely the amount of that rent. It is the university's position that

(a) arrangements for the payment of rent are a matter between the tenants and the landlord, in this case the OHC;

(b) the University would expect and urge the landlord to make every reasonable effort to work out flexible payment arrangements for those students experiencing genuine difficulty in meeting rents;

(c) in the circumstances it is the landlord's prerogative to take any legal action deemed necessary to collect rent payment.

3. If vacancies are created in the buildings as a result of evictions, will the University proceed to attempt to fill these vacancies through the Housing Service?

The married student apartments are operating on a break-even basis. In 1966 a positive need for married student housing was identified and the fact that there is a waiting list indicates that such a need in fact does exist. The University has a contractual arrangement with the OSHC and the Department of University Affairs to assume any financial shortfall that occurs. As the University cannot provide financial subsidies for residences, and since the charge of a financial shortfall against the present operating budget would cause serious hardships for all faculty and students in the University, the University has an obligation to maintain full occupancy. In addition, it is not felt that the University can deny available accommodation to qualified student applicants.

4. What is the University's position vis-à-vis the question of organizational recognition for the Tenants' Association and to what extent does the University recognize tenant control of the two buildings? Does the University support the concept of collective bargaining in this context?

The University has recognized that the Tenants' Association has been a useful channel for communication. However, the University's responsibilities are to see that the accommodation is used by married students and to fulfil its contractual obligations. It cannot prescribe the relationships that should exist between tenants and landlord.

5. What does the University feel it can do to bring about negotiations between the tenants and the OSHC?

The University has already taken the initiative to arrange for a meeting of all the parties involved. As I indicated earlier, I have now personally written to the Minister of Education and University Affairs to request further meetings to discuss this matter and have impressed upon the Minister the urgency of the questions. I hope that the Minister will consent to either participate in, or send a delegate to, such meetings. No change in the contractual arrangement can be made without a substantial subsidy. The University cannot make such a subsidy from its own resources without gravely weakening its academic program.

Final report on enrolment shows total of 36,164 students

Summary of the Senate Minutes, Jan. 8, 1971:

The minutes of the meeting held on Dec. 11, 1970 were approved.

The Senate received the Final Report on Enrolment, 1970-71 (26,591 full-time, 9,573 part-time students, Winter Session. This is a total increase of 247 (0.9%) full-time students and 1,344 (16.3%) part-time students over the same date last year).

The Senate received a Report from the Executive Committee noting that the Executive Committee had considered the Report of the Presidential Advisory Committee on Extension and recommended that the Report be forwarded to the Council of each College, Faculty, and School, to the SAC, the ATS, and the APUS, and to the Library Council for discussion. The Executive Committee would act as the co-ordinating body for proposals resulting from these discussions and advise on their implementation.

The Senate approved a Report from the Committee on University Extension recommending in favour of 11 non-faculty examiners in the Certificate Programs in Business and Criminology for the 1971 examinations.

The crisis in Arts and Science: a chronological report

Here, in chronological order, are reports of the events that led to the present situation in the Faculty of Arts and Science:

November 30, 1970

The general committee of the Faculty Council voted, 66 for, 48 against, "that this general committee immediately set up a commission to make recommendations on the restructuring of the Faculty Council of Arts and Science. This commission to have equal staff/student representation and report on or before March 1, 1971."

By an unrecorded vote, the general committee also decided that the commission should consist of the Dean or his representative as chairman, five faculty members to be elected from among themselves by the faculty members of the general committee, and five student members to be elected from among themselves by the student members of the general committee.

January 19, 1971

At the request of 15 members of the Council, a plenary meeting of the full Council was held to discuss this motion:

"Whereas the Council of the Faculty of Arts and Science has expressed its opposition to parity in matters of university government, and whereas the general committee is itself a committee of the Faculty, be it resolved that the proposed parity committees to study the restructuring of Council be abandoned and that a committee of six staff and two students plus the Dean of the Faculty or his representative as chairman be set up to report on restructuring of the Council to the full Council by April 1, 1971."

The chairman, Dr. John H. Sword, Provost of the University, said there would be four principal speakers, after which others might be heard if time permitted. These would be Profs. W. H. Nelson and John M. Rist, sponsors of the motion, who, of course, would argue for it, and Brian Morgan, sponsor of the motion adopted by the General Committee, and Peter Hall, University commissioner on the Students' Administrative Council.

Prof. Nelson denied that he and Prof. Rist were "hard liners". In fact, he said, they were left of centre. The heart of their case against staff-student parity, he continued, was that the ultimate authority in academic matters generally must be the faculty, and this they "do demand". Although the authority must lie with the staff, the influence of the students, even without parity, would be enormous. He called upon the administration to use its powers to operate the University for the "permanent" people. "We will fight this battle this winter, next winter, and every winter until hell freezes over", he concluded.

Prof. Rist said it was difficult to present rational arguments against the background of noise. (Several hundred students occupied the galleries during the meeting, there was a considerable amount of low-pitched conversation, there were occasional loud interruptions and banging of drums and tambourines.) "Perhaps I shouldn't use the word 'intimidation'", he said, "but I will." Prof. Rist, stating that this would be the last time he would speak in Council on the parity issue, said that 230 members of the faculty supported his position against parity.

Brian Morgan said Prof. Nelson's argument created an artificial split between students and staff. Prof. Nelson, he continued, had not offered any reasoned argument as to why the ultimate authority should lie with faculty and the students must "stay in their place". This attitude meant the thwarting of any structure that did not uphold the status quo. Students, he said, were regarded simply as voices, without power.

Peter Hall said he and Prof. Nelson agreed on one point "of this very basic issue" — that the Council could not be restructured without the full support and confidence of the faculty, but he would add that the Council could not be restructured without the full support and confidence of the students either. He reminded the Council members that they were deliberating and voting with the eyes of the students in the galleries upon them. "Surely you don't seriously expect anyone to come down from the galleries to block the exits", Mr. Hall said, referring to an "action plan" which had been published in The Varsity on Jan. 18.

It was moved and seconded that the question be put, on the ground that every possible argument for and against had been heard, at this meeting and before. The motion to vote was carried by 334 to 101.

On the main motion, against a parity committee, the vote was: for, 285; against, 192.

Norman Rogers, student representative on Council, called upon his conferees to withdraw "until we get parity". He said: "We no longer recognized the legitimacy of this body". Robert James, of SAC, asked the students to meet in Convocation Hall after Council had dispersed to decide upon a future course of action. This meeting led to a decision to hold an "educational festival" on parity in the foyer of Sidney Smith Hall and a mass meeting of Arts and Science students at noon the next day to consider a strike.

January 20

A student "strike committee" called a mass meeting in the foyer of Sidney Smith Hall at noon. About 700 students turned out. By a show of hands, they voted that "mobilization for a strike of students begin immediately, and that this strike be ratified by ballot vote among all the students of the Faculty, beginning Monday, Jan. 25." They also approved a motion condemning the action of the Faculty Council on Jan. 19.

The students were told that a strike, if approved by ballot, would be of limited duration and would be a boycott of classes on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, Jan. 26 to 28 inclusive, and a continuation of the "educational parity festival".

That night the Students' Administrative Council voiced its support for the student withdrawal from the Faculty Council and voted to help organize a strike vote and to support the strike, if an affirmative vote were obtained.

The SAC met in a second floor lecture hall in Sidney Smith Hall, while, in the foyer, the student "parity party" settled into its second night of talk, free coffee, continuous rock music, and periodic "anti-pollution" cleanups.

Robert Spencer presented two motions, both of which had been brought before the mass meeting earlier in the day. Mr. Spencer referred to the first as "a motion of general condemnation of the action taken at the Council of the Faculty of Arts and Science". The preamble stated that parity had been shown to have the "overwhelming support" of students by a referendum, was "enunciated and endorsed as an operating principle" by the Commission on University Government, and "is crucial to the growth of student responsibility and participation in the government of this University community, and is an essential guarantee of the full citizenship of students in that community".

In establishing "a nine-member restructuring committee of which only two members would be students", the Council "attempted to repudiate parity, and, by that attempt, chose to utterly disregard the majority opinion of the students in the Faculty".

The motion, carried by a large majority in a show of hands, declared that:

The SAC condemns the decision of the Council of the Faculty of Arts and Science to establish a restructuring committee which does not affirm, by its membership, the principle of parity;

SAC support the withdrawal of the student representatives from the Council and its committee;

SAC recognize the right of all students to equal and active participation in the decision-making processes of the University;

SAC can no longer recognize the legitimacy of the Council as the ultimate decision-making body of the Faculty of Arts and Science;

Furthermore, SAC appreciates the support of those members of the teaching staff who upheld the principle of parity by rejecting the Nelson-Rist motion, and welcomes their participation in this protest and in continuing efforts to seek a solution to the crisis.

An amendment, which called upon the council to "support a restructuring committee constituted on the basis of parity, with power to restructure the Faculty of Arts and Science Council along parity lines", was defeated.

"It's entirely unreasonable to demand that a committee be set up with such rigid guidelines," Mr. Spencer argued. "Why set up the committee, if you're going to tell it what to do?"

The second motion resolved that the SAC co-operate fully with the organizers of the student-faculty strike to facilitate Monday's strike vote, and, if the majority of students vote "yes" to the strike proposal, that the SAC participate fully in the organization of the strike.

Asked to define "strike", Craig Heron, who spoke on behalf of the organizers, read first from a dictionary, and subsequently from a statement then in draft form. The statement defined the strike as "a non-violent mass action organized to bring all normal business in the Faculty of Arts and Science to a complete standstill, for at least three days".

Action would include a boycott of all classes, "picket lines acting as deterrents against attendance but involving no physical obstruction", "demonstrations and non-violent protests aimed at the administrative functions of the Faculty", and continuation of the "parity festival" including "special educational and entertainment events".

"I'm tired of talking about the structure of restructuring committees", Peter Hall declared. "There are more fundamental issues to strike about. However, a lot of students are very angry about what happened yesterday, and if they want to go on strike over it, I think we should support them."

Eric Miglin, vice-president, spoke against supporting a strike. "In the end, it's going to become a form of coercion. We're getting into a lot of problems when we get involved in situations involving a lot of people; it doesn't require much for things to get out of hand."

Rod Hurd, president, replied that "we have, in the lobby, a number of very angry students. There is probably a greater danger in leaving things as they are without any direction or organization."

The motion was carried: 18 in favour, 9 opposed, 2 abstentions.

A short discussion on whether the SAC should support the election for members of the search committee for a new President was left unresolved, when a quorum count failed.

Registrar Robin Ross told the council that the Elections Office "would appreciate any help or advice you could give us." Mr. Hurd urged that the council accept the election procedures and make nomination slips available, but his motion could not come to a vote.

The "parity party" carried on through the night, with strategy meetings, folk-singing, and fencing lessons. Close to twenty stalwarts slept in the foyer of Sidney Smith Hall, though some of these headed home in the morning to sleep again in comfort.

January 22

At noon, about 40 members of the teaching staff met in a classroom in Sidney Smith Hall with about 10 members of the strike mobilization committee. Prof. Michael Cross, History, who presided, said the meeting had been called on short notice in order to hear the view of "progressive" members of staff who were concerned about the situation.

Four steps that might be taken were discussed:

The formation of a counter-committee on restructuring the Faculty Council, which would ignore the Council as it now stands;

Faculty support for the students in whatever action they might take, the formation of "educational" committees, and the holding of staff/student discussions in departments;

Steps to revive a restructuring report made by a parity committee which, it was said, was tabled by the Faculty Council a year ago.

Meetings to be held by "progressive" faculty members.

The group approved the proposal to support the students in whatever action might be adopted and decided to defer action on the other suggestions. It was agreed to meet again at noon on Jan. 25.

At one o'clock, Prof. Cross reported what his group had done to another mass assembly of students in the foyer of Sidney Smith Hall. Again several hundred students were present. The gathering was told by the strike mobilization committee leaders that the meeting had been called because there was some confusion in the minds of many students as to exactly what action had been decided at the rally on Jan. 20. A motion was presented calling for a "non-violent" strike to begin at once, this strike to consist of abstention from classes, picketing (it was called "educational picketing"), and a continuation of the parity "festival".

There would be a referendum on Monday and Tuesday, in which the students would be expected to confirm or reject the strike already in progress.

Speakers on both sides argued the motion. Brian Morgan and Richard Reoch urged that there be no strike until a referendum had been held. Mr. Reoch emphasized the need for non-violence in any action that might be taken. He was concerned about the "educational" picket lines, which, he said, were bound to be intimidating. Larry Hoffman, Graduate Students' Union president, advocated a strike to begin at once.

The vote, by a show of hands, was overwhelmingly against an immediate strike. The student committee thereupon bent to the task of organizing for a ballot vote on Jan. 25 and 26.

New salary program for non-academic staff

A new salary structure and classification program for non-academic staff throughout the University of Toronto will be implemented on Feb. 1. In his announcement, A. G. Rankin, Executive Vice-President (Non-Academic), points out that the program is the result of extensive work over the past year. The salary curve is based on a comprehensive survey and will be competitive with community practices. These studies were carried out by the Compensation Section of the University Personnel Department.

The program and salary structure were explained to some 300 departmental representatives at a meeting in the Medical Sciences Auditorium on Jan. 21.

The first step in implementation of the new salary structure will result in salary increases for all employees who are now being paid below the minimum of the new salary ranges.

Group appointed to seek School of Business director

President Claude Bissell has appointed the following committee to recommend a successor to Prof. O. Warren Main, who retires as Director of the School of Business at the end of the current session:

Chairman—Prof. Donald F. Forster, Vice-Provost and Executive Assistant to the President.

Prof. D. A. Ondrack, G. D. Quirin,

J. A. Sawyer and D. F. Shanno, School of Business.

Prof. Ben Bernholtz, Chairman, Department of Industrial Engineering; Prof. A. R. Dobell, Institute for Policy Analysis.

R. N. Amer and D. M. Gee, student representatives; J. D. McKeown and E. Y. Yeates, representatives of the School of Business Alumni Association.

Recommends phasing out of the Faculty of Food Sciences

A proposal that the Faculty of Food Sciences should be phased out over a three-year period is under earnest discussion. Under this plan, some of the Faculty's activities would be consolidated with similar programs elsewhere in the University.

President Claude Bissell said the executive committee of the Senate had before it a resolution from Dr. John Hamilton, vice-president, health sciences, that no students be admitted to the first year of the four-year course in September. The executive committee is scheduling immediate discussions with the Food Sciences faculty council.

The next step would be to take the resolution to the Senate. If supported there it would go to the Board of Governors for approval.

The projected cost of maintaining and upgrading standards were key factors in the recommendation, Dr. Bissell said. The University will operate at a deficit this year. All academic departments have been asked to cut non-salary spending by 15 per cent. There are no signs that the economic squeeze will end in the foreseeable future.

Effects of the proposed change on the University's operating budget would be felt gradually. "It would be imperative that high standards be maintained until 1974 when students now in first year complete their course", the President stated.

He said that every effort would be made to find suitable appointments elsewhere in the University for senior members of the Food Sciences staff. This would be done in stages as successive classes graduate.

In support of his proposal, Dr. Hamilton stressed three points: insufficient demand, high cost per student, and the availability of similar courses elsewhere in the province.

Nineteen Bachelor of Science (Food Sciences) degrees were conferred in 1969, fifteen in 1970. Two Master of Science (Food Sciences) degrees were awarded by the School of Graduate Studies in 1969, none in 1970.

Because of low registration and the Faculty's three divisions (nutrition, textiles, food chemistry), the ratio of students to teaching staff is about five to one. The University average is 10 or 11 to one.

Added to this is the prospect of having more courses which could be designated as Home Economics so as to meet new College of Education requirements for admission to studies leading to a Type "A" Certificate in this field.

Also affecting the cost factor is the need to refurbish and renovate existing laboratories and take other steps in order to keep abreast of rising standards.

"It is becoming abundantly clear that, because of the present and foreseeable financial constraints, the University will not be able to continue the current level of support for the Faculty of Food Sciences, let alone expand the program," Dr. Hamilton commented.

Dr. Hamilton's study was precipitated by a presidential advisory committee appointed to select and recommend a successor to Prof. Barbara McLaren who retired as dean last year. In June, 1970, the committee asked for clarification of the faculty's future role.

In addition to his own investigation, Dr. Hamilton considered statements from a number of individuals representing many interests and a brief from the senior committee of the Food Sciences' faculty council. The last item included the senior committee's own views along with proposals from other members of the academic staff, alumni, and representatives of the undergraduate and graduate body.

Alex G. Rankin, executive vice-president (non-academic), assessed the financial implications.

The Faculty of Food Sciences was established in 1962, replacing the Faculty of Household Science which, since 1907, had provided instruction for students of food chemistry and household economics in the Faculty of Arts and Science as well as for those in the Bachelor of Household Science course. The change recognized an emphasis not on training future homemakers but rather on the education of professional staff for industry, government, teaching and health services.

"In the several fields of food chemistry, nutrition and textiles, the Faculty has made notable research contributions," Dr. Hamilton said.

In its first years, Household Science had various homes, including the old Fred Victor Mission. In 1910 it moved to the present building on Bloor Street at Queen's Park, the gift of Lillian Massey Treble.

Acting Dean's statement

A statement expressing great concern regarding the proposal to phase out the Faculty of Food Sciences has been issued by Prof. Iva Armstrong, Acting Dean: "A move to discontinue the Faculty seems incredible in view of its increasingly important role in the areas of health and human ecology. Our graduates are in great demand at a time when employment opportunities in many fields are scarce," she said. Her statement continued:

"The program of this Faculty is noted for its scientific orientation and high standards are maintained. Its research contributions are well-known and include studies of the physiological, psychological and anthropometric aspects of obesity, computer analysis of nutritional data and relationship of malnutrition to physical and mental development.

"Contrary to figures recently published, enrolment totals 109, including seven graduate students with a student-staff ratio exceeding 7 to 1. This is higher than for some of the other professional faculties. In addition, approximately 200 students in other Health Science faculties take courses provided by the Faculty of Food Sciences. Upgrading courses to other students are offered through the Department of Extension in evening and summer sessions.

"Graduates are members of and leaders in professional organizations such as the Canadian Dietetic Association, Canadian Institute of Food Technology and Canadian Home Economics Association.

"The alumnae of the Faculty of Food Sciences, formerly Faculty of Household Science, totals close to 2,000. Many graduates hold key positions in dietetics, education, government and industry.

"Staff and students are preparing to present strong arguments to the President in defence of the retention of the Faculty."
